SCOTCH WHISKY REGIONS

There are five Scotch Whisky regions – Campbeltown, Highland, Islay, Lowland and Speyside. Each offers a different perspective on Scotch Whisky.

GLENMORANGIE

Starting with water, wood, yeast, and barley, the Glenmorangie whisky makers are endlessly imaginative in their quest to create delicious whiskies. Known as the Distillers of Tain, they’ve been honing their craft for more than 175 years.

The Tarlogie Springs, Glenmorangie’s own water source and most prized asset, is the product of rain that has been forcing its way through layers of limestone and sandstone for a hundred years.

These natural minerals give it its ‘hard’ water qualities and provide Glenmorangie with a raw ingredient unique amongst Highland distilleries.

SPEYSIDE

The most densely populated Whisky region in the world, famous for fertile glens and, of course, the River Spey. Speyside whiskies are known for being frugal with peat and full of fruit. Apple, pear, honey, vanilla and spice all have a part a role in expressions from this region, which are commonly matured in Sherry casks.

A critical and often under rated component of the whisky making process. Kilning, requires skill and experience to ensure the malt delivers a consistent flavour profile for peated or unpeated whisky. Not simply drying out the barley after germination but stopping the grain using the starch which is essential during distilling. The Kilnsman needs to consider the moisture content, temperature control and the need to effectively render enzymes inactive before milling at just the right point.

BLENDED

Blended whisky is where most people start their whisky journey, and with about 90% of whisky sales around the world being blends, it’s the sort of whisky that most people drink. It’s easy for single malt fans to write them off as cheap and uninteresting, but dig a little deeper and you’ll find a whole wealth of great whiskies waiting to be discovered.

INTERNATIONAL

It doesn't have to be Scotch to be whisky! Whisky (or whiskey as it's known in Ireland and America) is produced all over the world with Irish, American, and Japanese whisky all pushing boundaries and providing strong competition for traditional Scotch.
